The Power of Advocacy

Crises test who we are as a nation – and we are stronger when we are united. The COVID-19 pandemic has revealed how interconnected and interdependent the world is. In our shared vulnerability, we have realized that our strength as a human community lies in our togetherness. We are safer when we care for all of our neighbors, listen to public health experts, and resist medical prejudice and scapegoating. The crisis has also shown us that we each have a role to play and every one of us counts.

This year, we join people across the world to celebrate the courage and resilience of refugees, recognizing the hardships they have faced and the new lives they have created. Now is a time to come together in an exceptional show of human solidarity and kindness. As refugees and friends of refugees in the United States, we celebrate the positive impact refugees have on U.S. communities. We know the challenges newcomers face are greater than ever and that we must rally in support of preserving the resettlement program and promoting policies that help refugees rebuild their lives in the United States.

In the midst of the current COVID-19 crisis, we stand in solidarity with our refugee neighbors. As this year is also the 40th anniversary of the Refugee Act of 1980, which formalized the U.S. resettlement program and asylum system, we urge you join in taking action to underscore the spirit of welcome and to honor the contributions of refugees in our communities.

What is Advocacy?

Effective advocacy lifts up the voices of refugees and allies to change hearts and minds, including those of policy makers and people in power. Advocacy includes activities like public education, relationship-building with policy makers, civic engagement, voter registration, and media outreach. Advocacy can lead to systemic, lasting, positive changes that help all people thrive in their communities. It is critical that we build bipartisan support for refugees by working with policy makers from both parties.

Who You Are. Why You Care. What You Want.

Your story as a refugee or supporter of refugee resettlement is your most important qualification as an advocate. Developing relationships with and educating policy makers are necessary to see welcoming policies and attitudes towards refugees. It is important that policy makers understand that their constituents care about refugees, and that refugees are their constituents — they live, work, and contribute in their communities, obtain U.S. citizenship, and vote. Talk with policy makers about the way your community welcomes refugees and the positive contributions refugees make to your community, and urge them to support refugee resettlement.

Engaging Elected Leaders

It is more important than ever to meet with your local, state, and national policy makers to educate them about the vital role that refugees and all newcomers play in your community. Because change takes time, engaging with policy makers should be viewed as part of a continuing process of sharing information, building relationships, and having refugees' perspectives genuinely considered when decisions are made that impact their lives.

There are positive proposals that local elected officials can adopt to affirm the importance of resettlement and foster communities of welcome. City, municipal, and other local councils and commissions need to hear that their communities stand ready to welcome refugees. Urge your local leaders to adopt welcoming resolutions that extend hospitality to refugees and all newcomers. Click here to see a framework The United Methodist Church General Board of Church & Society developed to build and facilitate welcome.

Individuals who oppose refugee resettlement are making their voices heard loudly and frequently to policy makers. These groups utilize anti-refugee, anti-immigrant, and anti-Muslim rhetoric and draft legislation to engender fear and foster hostile atmospheres for newcomers. If we want policy makers to support positive legislation and oppose proposals that would turn our backs on refugees and violate our values of welcome and hospitality, then they need to hear from refugees and supportive community members.

ACTION ALERT: Urge Congress to Honor the U.S. Refugee Resettlement Program and the Contributions of Refugee Neighbors

Now is the time to make your voices heard to tell your Members of Congress to stand in solidarity with refugees and support refugee resettlement. During this difficult time, crises test who we are as a nation. In recognition of the sacrifice, resilience, and contributions of refugees - including the hundreds of thousands working on the frontlines of pandemic response - now is the time to make your voice heard.

How to Prepare & Organize Virtual Local Meetings With Policy Makers

STEP 1. Learn about your elected officials:

- Are your Members of Congress in Congressional leadership, or on the Senate or House Appropriations Committees; Senate or House Judiciary Committees; Senate or House Homeland Security Committees; or Senate or House Foreign Relations Committees? If so, they have jurisdiction over various aspects of the refugee program. Even if they aren't in leadership or on these committees, they can still be champions for refugees. To learn more about your governor, state legislators, mayor, and local officials, click here.
- What have they said about refugees in the past? Has the member put out statements, authored op-eds, or been supportive of refugees? If they have, be sure to thank them and their staff. If they have a record of not supporting refugee resettlement, find out why. Have they cited reasons for not supporting the program? If so, build your talking points to address those concerns.
- What issues are of interest to them? Do they often speak out on certain issues? This can help you determine what approach to take when discussing refugees in your meeting. What did they do before they were elected to Congress? This can impact their perspective. It is your job as a successful advocate to discuss topics and frame issues in a way that will resonate with them.

STEP 2. Create an advocacy team: An ideal team consists of different stakeholder voices including refugees, case workers, faith leaders, business leaders, military veterans, and community leaders – all who can share in the planning, outreach, and coordination of visits and speak to the diversity of support for refugee resettlement.

STEP 3. Outreach to elected officials' offices: To set up a virtual meeting, call your Members of Congress, state officials, or local officials. Explain who you are, what organization you're with (if any), and that you would like to meet with the official virtually. You can also send a formal email requesting a meeting with the official and/or their staff (sample letter below). Include in the request how the meeting will take place (phone, Zoom, etc.). If you don't hear back in a few days, send a reminder email or call again. You can also use district staff for assistance, especially if there is someone in the office with whom you have a relationship. Remember, if the official(s) themselves are unavailable, always request to meet with the staff member who works on immigration.

When you contact the office to request a virtual visit by telephone or video conference, you can ask if they have a conference line, or set up your own conference line for everyone to use. Some offices are very comfortable with videoconferencing technology, but others are not. Keep that in mind when making your request, and make sure the office knows that you are available to connect in whatever way they prefer. Options for holding a remote meeting include setting up an account with freeconferencecall.com, Zoom, Google Hangouts, Apple Facetime, or any platform with which you are familiar.

Sample Email to Request Appointment

Dear X,

My name is [name] and I am from [City, State]. As a constituent of [the official's name], I would like to request a virtual appointment with you and the [official's name] on [DATE, TIME] to talk about ways to honor refugees on World Refugee Day and how refugees and immigrants are being impacted by COVID-19 in my community. I plan to use [platform] to conduct this meeting, and I expect to be joined by X people.

Please feel free to contact me at [phone number and email] should you have any questions. I look forward to this "virtual" visit!

Thank you, [Name]

STEP 4. Have a plan: Before the virtual visit, convene your advocacy team to assign roles:

- The Facilitator: This person starts the meeting, introduces the group, explains the purpose of the meeting, and provides time for each person to briefly introduce themselves and their organization and/or connection to refugees, to show that the group represents thousands of community members. The facilitator will also jump in if the meeting goes off-track and redirect the conversation.
- The Personal Story: Storytelling is key to advocacy. A refugee should tell their story to show how people's lives are changed through refugee resettlement. Consider inviting a refugee who has been featured in a local news article, which can encourage policy makers to prioritize the meeting.

- The Community Support: Faith, business, employers, military, and community leaders briefly share how refugees have contributed to the social, and economic fabric of their new community.
- Specific Issue Points: It will be helpful to bring handouts, information on refugees by state and stories of welcome by state.
- The Ask: The critical part when you make an ask, and wait for a response:
 - For Congress:
 - Will you cosponsor the bipartisan resolution supporting refugees and resettlement, commemorating the 40th anniversary of the Refugee Act of 1980? (H.Res.902 / S.Res.545 / Bi-partisan talking points)
 - Will you support a supplemental $642 million for the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) in FY2020 through the Refugee and Entrant Assistance account to ensure vulnerable populations like refugees don't fall through the cracks and can receive housing, food, and the care they need? (Talking points)
 - Will you hold the administration accountable to operating the resettlement program in good faith and restoring both the resettlement program and asylum protections to historic norms, and to welcoming asylum seekers and stateless individuals, preventing family separation, and ending detention of asylum seekers and other vulnerable migrants, in favor of community-based alternatives?
 - Will you join the House Bipartisan Refugee Caucus? (for members of the House of Representatives)
 - For State and Local Leaders: "Will you be a champion for refugee resettlement, oppose any and all anti-refugee proposals, and help us enact pro-refugee policies?" Depending on your state and local context, ask state and local leaders to:
 - Pass a refugees welcome resolution to commemorate World Refugee Day; and/or
 - Support workforce development opportunities for refugees, such as emergency licensing for internationally-trained medical professionals.
 - For more information about state and local advocacy, check out our State Action Toolkit for a Refugee and Immigrant Inclusive Response to COVID-19: bit.ly/StateCOVIDToolkit.

STEP 5. Prepare and gather:

- Plan for your virtual advocacy visit: Meet virtually with your team to plan your conversation. Don't forget to assign roles, write down the logistical details, and time a practice session.
- Send your "leave behinds" early: When you confirm your visit with the staffer the day before your meeting, attach your "leave behind" materials so that they can reference them throughout your call.
- "Arrive" Early: If you are using your own phone or video line, gather your delegation at least 10 minutes before the call is set to begin. Take attendance and make sure the note taker has the names, cities, states, and email addresses of all participants to include in the follow-up email.

STEP 6. A roadmap for your advocacy visit:

- Each person introduces themselves.
- The group leader presents a "thank you" for the staffer and/or officials.
- A delegation member presents the policy / advocacy ask.
- A few delegation members share their stories and educate the official about why the issue is important.
- Ask your questions to the staffer/official. Listen to and write down their answers.
- Repeat your ask and thank the staffer again for their time.

STEP 7. Debrief: It's important to debrief as a team in a separate location following the meeting. As a group, ask: What did we hear and learn? Did we get what we wanted? How did we work together as a team? What are the next steps? How can we engage this policy maker in the future, perhaps through event invitations, etc.? Share with your national advocacy staff (contact information on last page).

STEP 8. Follow-up: Always send a thank you email to the staff after the meeting. Reiterate the asks and send any information they asked for and any other information you think would be helpful. To maintain the relationship, you should invite the staff and/or the official to an upcoming event to meet with refugees.

Media & Outreach Resources

Writing & Pitching a Refugee Related Event or Opinion Editorial (Op-Ed)

When drafting an opinion piece, research the outlet you are submitting to. Many have a word limit around 600, but please check the outlet's website for guidance. Feel free to use the points in the draft op-ed below as you write your own opinion article, or write directly from the heart -- what you have to say deserves to be heard!

This year, editors are very focused on how COVID is impacting every-day life. Your op-ed or event does not need to focus on the pandemic, but keep this in mind when framing it.

When pitching your event, op-ed, or other welcoming project:

- Most editors prefer pitches over email or through a submission form on their website.
- Keep your pitch on-message and as short as possible. Reporters and editors are often on a deadline and receive many pitches each day.
- Open your pitch with an interesting first line, mention how it is relevant in the time of COVID, and mention how this is a new and innovative take on current news in the community that their readership will find interesting.
- See the draft pitch below for an example email.

To increase your chances of getting media coverage for an event -- especially a virtual one -- set up an exclusive interview with one outlet. Making your event exclusive to one reporter makes it more appealing to the journalist, as they will be the first ones to "break" the story.

When pitching an exclusive story, research the outlets and reporters in your area. Who are the top current event, immigration, or political reporters in your area? Have they written about refugees before? If so, how can you tie your event into their previous work? Answering these questions and using them to draft your pitch will increase the chances of your welcoming event being covered and featured as an exclusive in a larger outlet.

Draft Pitch Email for Event:

Hello [USE THE NAME IF YOU HAVE IT],

I hope you are well! I wanted to let you know of a potential story opportunity about how new members of our communities are contributing during the time of COVID in CITY/STATE.

On [DATE, ORGANIZATION] will host a [EVENT TYPE, ie: virtual town hall, musical performance, etc.] with refugees in our community that are giving back during this dark time. While they are from [COUNTRIES], they are joining together with local leaders including [LIST] to create a community that is healthy and united in the face of this pandemic.

We would like to highlight the human stories behind those new Americans working on the front lines, particularly those serving in hospitals or elder care facilities, those making sure our grocery stores are stocked, and those volunteering to keep [CITY] vibrant. Given your past articles highlighting refugees/immigrants, I would love to offer you an exclusive interview with the group next DATE if you are interested.

I have included the invitation below with a full list of individuals participating, but please let me know if you are interested or if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Sample 2020 Refugee Contributions Faith Leader Op-Ed
(We encourage you to make this as much your own story as possible)

Gratitude in the Time of COVID-19

In the time of COVID-19, I reflect how from the earliest days of [Sunday school/Hebrew School/Seminary], my faith has taught and called me to welcome the stranger, stand with the vulnerable, and love my neighbor. Now, as a [father, minister, and resident of STATE NAME], I am proud to demonstrate these values in my daily life and weekly sermons at [name of congregation]. But it is also because of those values that I am deeply inspired by how new members of our community are keeping us healthy and safe in the face of pandemic.

Refugees have long been some of the first to step up in times of crisis. Maybe it's because they learned the value of community on the long road to lives free from fear and persecution, but they are willing to serve and give back to those who took them in.

In recent years, my congregants and I would mark World Refugee Day by lamenting attacks on refugee resettlement. And while we continue to work together to ensure the United States does not fail the world's most vulnerable, this year our strongest emotion is one of gratitude.

[INSERT RELEVANT STORY ABOUT REFUGEES IN YOUR COMMUNITY GIVING BACK: This can be a story of a refugee serving in a hospital or elder care facility, or a refugee working in supply chains to keep food on our shelves, or a refugee family cooking food to make sure local firefighters/police officers are staying fed as they work. The more personal the better. Include where they are from and why they are here, if appropriate.]

[INSERT RELEVANT SCRIPTURE – EX: “Bring water to the thirsty, meet the fugitive with bread... For they have fled from the swords, from the drawn sword, from the bent bow, and from the stress of battle.” (Isaiah 21:14-15); “And (as for) those who believed and fled and struggled hard in Allah's way, and those who gave shelter and helped, these are the believers truly; they shall have forgiveness and honorable provision.” (Quran 8:74); “And you are to love those who are foreigners, for you yourselves were foreigners in Egypt.” (Deuteronomy 10:19)]

From the [earliest books] in the Bible and other sacred texts, our faith calls on us show mercy and hospitality to those fleeing persecution. We are called to treat them with dignity, respect, and love, providing the same welcome that we ourselves would hope for. As Americans, we live in a country built in part by the hard work, dreams, and determination of generations of immigrants and refugees -- many of whom were our ancestors.

Refugees are mothers, fathers, and children. They are doctors, nurses, and medical aides working in our hospitals and elder care facilities. They are truck drivers making sure our grocery stores stay stocked. They are factory workers making sure we have what we need. As the world searches for solutions at the nexus of the largest displacement crisis in history and a global pandemic, we have a moral and legal obligation to those who only want to be good neighbors with lives free from fear and persecution. These people are no different than our [Biblical] ancestors who were once refugees who found welcome and were called to do the same.

That's why this World Refugee Day, as the pandemic makes it hard for us to find something to be grateful for, I urge you to join me in expressing gratitude to those, like [NAME OF REFUGEE MENTIONED ABOVE], who risked it all to become part of our community and give back.

Sample Refugee Leader Op-Ed Template (We adapt to make this your own story as possible/appropriate.)

(Ideally authored by a refugee working on the frontlines of COVID-19 response in medical care, in supply chains, or by supporting community efforts to bolster public health)

In XXXX (year) I was forced to leave [INSERT COUNTRY] because of [INSERT DETAILS OF PERSECUTION OR THREAT, OTHER DETAILS OF YOUR JOURNEY].

My personal story is unique, but my situation is shared by countless others who have also experienced unimaginable loss and tragedy. It is also a story of community – not just of the refugee community but of the community here in [INSERT LOCATION] and others across the United States that made the choice to welcome me, and those like me, to our new homes.

I'm forever grateful to the U.S. Refugee Resettlement program and [INSERT CITY] that gave me a second chance. In the time of COVID-19, gratitude may seem to be a rare commodity, but that's exactly what I feel, even during this public health crisis.

[INSERT DETAILS ABOUT ARRIVAL YEAR OR ANY OTHER PERSONAL DETAILS. What was it like when you arrived? What do you remember thinking, feeling? What are you most thankful for?] Through resettlement, I was able to rebuild my life and give back to my community.

In this time, I'm inspired by ways Americans are choosing to support families like mine, and I'm inspired by my fellow refugees that are showing support right back.

Like you, refugees are mothers, fathers, and children. We are doctors, nurses, and medical aides working in hospitals and elder care facilities. We are truck drivers making sure our grocery stores stay stocked. We are factory workers making sure we have what we need to fight COVID-19. We are standing by your side during this pandemic and we'll be standing right there with you when we triumph over it.

Forty years ago, Congress passed the Refugee Act of 1980, legislation that firmly established the U.S. Refugee Resettlement Program. By passing it, the United States became the world's leader on refugee resettlement. It's a program that has saved many, many lives, including my own, and was historically supported by both Republican and Democratic administrations. Unfortunately, over the past few years, our government's policies towards refugees have not reflected the compassion and generosity that I've seen in [CITY NAME]. Resettlement has been slashed, vital lifelines have been cut off, and lives are left hanging in the balance.

[STATE AFFILIATION, e.g. Virginians] are empathetic and gave me a new life. [INSERT Anecdote about how you were welcomed by the community]. That's why I'm serving my community as [INSERT INFORMATION ABOUT WORK, ACTIVISM, VOLUNTEERISM].

There are thousands of other former refugees just like me all across the country working to make their communities safer during COVID-19. But beyond the virus, they are making our nation stronger. They are starting businesses, serving in the military, paying taxes. They are at once inspiring and ordinary, the kind of citizens this country needs.

In these challenging times, we must call on our elected leaders in Congress to also inspire us. They must rebuild the refugee resettlement program. Our communities and our nation will be made more prosperous and strong when we can restore policies that reflect our values and honor our promises to the thousands of refugee families who are looking for a safe place to call home. We will emerge from COVID-19 with our sense of community intact. I just hope one day the program that saved my life will do so, too.

Refugee Talking Points

Resettlement is a refugee's last option for safety:

- Today, we are facing the worst refugee crisis in recorded history. There are over 70 million displaced people in the world, 25 million of which are refugees, half of whom are children.
- Resettlement is the last resort, when refugees cannot safely return to their home country and when they cannot safely remain in the country to which they initially fled. Refugee resettlement is a life-saving program available to less than 1% of refugees.
- To be considered for resettlement, a refugee must first receive a refugee status determination by the United Nations refugee agency (UNHCR) by proving they are fleeing persecution based on their ethnicity, nationality, religion, political opinion, or social group. UNHCR then refers refugees to one of 37 resettlement countries, one of which is the U.S.
- Since the creation of the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program, the U.S. has set an average admissions goal of 95,000 annually. The U.S. resettled less than half of FY18's then-historic low refugee admissions goal of 45,000. We resettled 30,000 refugees in FY19. This year, due to an even lower resettlement ceiling -- 18,000 -- and a temporary halt to the resettlement program due to travel restrictions under COVID-19, only 7,450 refugees have been resettled in the United States.

The U.S. Refugee Admissions Program is critical to U.S. foreign policy & national security objectives:

- Refugees are the most vetted individuals entering the United States, and undergo complex security checks through the DHS, DOD, FBI, State Department, and a number of U.S. intelligence agencies.
- The U.S. must maintain its commitment to resettle refugees and encourage other countries to do the same, as resettlement is a critical tool to alleviate regional instability, maintain relationships with important allies, and advance our national security and foreign policy interests.
- National security experts agree: refugee resettlement advances our national security interests and contributes to keeping our troops safe around the world. Resettling refugees is tangible proof that the U.S. is a beacon of inclusion and debunks the anti-American narratives of terrorist propaganda.
- The Afghan Special Immigrant Visa (SIV) program allows the U.S. to resettle Afghans who had worked for the U.S. government in Afghanistan and whose lives were threatened because of their work in support of the U.S. mission. As U.S. military involvement in Afghanistan continues, we cannot complete our mission there without the Afghan translators, engineers, security guards, embassy clerks, logisticians, cultural advisors, and soldiers who stand by us. Protecting our allies is vital to maintaining support of the Afghan people and to completing our mission there and for future wars in which we may be engaged.

Refugees positively impact their new communities:

- Refugees are serving on the frontlines of the COVID-19 response. They are doctors, nurses, and medical personnel working in hospitals, clinics and elder care facilities. They work in vital supply chains, keeping grocery store shelves stocked. The work in factories and plants making sure we have what we need to stay healthy and beat the pandemic.
- Refugees give back to their new communities. They start working as soon as possible, pay taxes, start businesses, and become active members of society.
- In 2018, the average workforce participation rate of refugees is 81.8%, above the national 62%.
- 13% of refugees were entrepreneurs in 2015, compared to just 9% percent of the U.S.-born.
- 40% of all Fortune 500 companies were founded by refugees, immigrants or their children.

Refugees have been directly impacted by COVID-19:

- The realities of migration and displacement mean that COVID-19 poses specific risks to the health, economic survival, and physical safety and well-being of those refugees living in the most vulnerable of settings. Limited space means social distancing can be difficult, if not impossible, for people in migrant shelters, refugee camps, immigration detention, or urban slums and informal settlements.
- Limited to no access to essential hygiene supplies – like soap and water, or hand sanitizer – increases the risk of contracting COVID-19 faced by refugees in these most vulnerable situations.
- Refugees are often employed in industries that are considered essential services and face health risks simply by reporting for work, particularly if workplace safeguards (e.g., personal protective equipment) are not in place.
- Information about COVID-19 and how to prevent its spread is not consistently available in languages spoken by refugees; nor is information easily accessible by those who are unable to read and write. For some who experience symptoms of COVID-19, including refugees living in places where they face local hostility or discrimination may limit access to testing and treatment. Migrants and refugees with serious, pre-existing health conditions will also suffer, as limited public and non-profit health services shift to the COVID-19 emergency response.

U.S. communities support refugee resettlement and want to see it restored to historic norms:

- Communities across the country support refugees. Faith leaders, educators, business leaders, and local, state, and national elected officials, as well as thousands of community members have demonstrated welcome for refugees in every state.
- We urge Members of Congress to:
 - Cosponsor the bipartisan resolution that commemorates the 40th Anniversary of the Refugee Act of 1980 and celebrates the contributions of refugees over these many years (H.Res.902 / S.Res.545 - click on these links to see the periodically updated list of cosponsors);
 - Provide a supplemental $642 million for the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) in FY2020 through the Refugee and Entrant Assistance account to ensure vulnerable populations like refugees don't fall through the cracks and can receive housing, food, and the care they need;
 - Hold the administration accountable to operating the resettlement program in good faith and restoring both the resettlement program and asylum protections to historic norms, and to welcoming asylum seekers and stateless individuals, preventing family separation, and ending detention of asylum seekers and other vulnerable migrants, in favor of community-based alternatives;
 - (For Representatives Only) Join the bipartisan congressional refugee caucus by emailing rachel.calanni@mail.house.gov (led by Reps. Lofgren (D-CA-19), Diaz-Balart (R-FL-25), Neguse (D-CO-2), and Chris Smith (R-NJ-4)).

Talking Points Bipartisan Resolution on U.S. Refugee Program:

- This is the 40th Year Anniversary of the Refugee Act of 1980 which created the US Refugee Admissions program, a time to celebrate the positive contributions refugees have made to our nation. (H.Res.902 / S.Res.545 /Note: these congress.gov links also provide periodically updated list of cosponsors)
- During the COVID-19 crisis, as we work to keep people safe, refugees are also working on the frontlines and in essential jobs, including 161,000 working in health care, and 170,000 in the food supply chain. (See Refugee Workers on the Frontlines and as Essential Workers, New American Economy, April 22, 2020.)
- Refugees have helped our armed forces on the frontlines. Many seeking refuge are persecuted for helping our military. This includes refugees from Iraq and Afghanistan who are endangered for working with US peacekeepers and humanitarian agencies.
- Supporting refugees and refugee resettlement is helping to support religious freedom. The U.S. refugee program has long been a means to protect those fleeing persecution for promoting democracy and free speech, or those persecuted for practicing their religious faith, such as many Christians in the Middle East, or Jews from the former Soviet Union.
- The refugee program is an American program, reflecting common U.S. values and interests. It also helps us to meet our diplomatic and strategic interests and our economic interests.
- If you have any questions or would like to cosponsor this letter and or the resolution itself, please contact Alex Guajardo with Rep. Garcia at alex.guajardo@mail.house.gov or Rebekah Rodriguez with Rep. Curtis at rebekah.rodriguez@mail.house.gov.

Talking Points on $642 million Supplemental Funding for Refugee and Entrant Assistance Account:

- Refugees, asylees, Afghan/Iraqi Special Immigrant Visa Recipients, Cuban Haitian Entrants, Human Trafficking Victims, and others known as Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) Populations of Concern (hereafter referred to as refugees), have recently settled in the United States, and just like all of us in the U.S., they share the vulnerabilities and challenges related to COVID-19.
- Refugees often work in jobs that cannot be carried out virtually, and thus, with the local shutdowns, many refugees are among the rising number of unemployed in the American economy.
- Other refugees stepped up to work in essential jobs in health care, groceries, shipping, elder care, meat and other food processing, trucking, etc. Indeed, 161,000 refugees work in health care and 170,000 work as part of the U.S. food supply chain. This makes them vital, as all essential workers are vital, to our national perseverance during the COVID-19 crisis. But also, like all essential workers, their work puts them and their families at health risk.
- Unfortunately, those who most recently arrived in the U.S. who are laid off due to work closures or who cannot work because of illness do not have access to meaningful unemployment relief because they either have short work histories in this country and qualify only for small amounts under state programs, or because they are so recently arrived that they do not qualify for either unemployment or pandemic relief; and some also are not eligible for Economic Impact Payments from the Internal Revenue Service or have obstacles to accessing it.

- Moreover, as newcomers, and as individuals, many of whom have already lost their country of birth, loved ones, and possessions and as survivors of persecution, torture and/or other trauma, they have transitional needs as they move from being a refugee to building a normal life. Also, for many of them rapid employment within 4-6 months, the usual mechanism for building resilience and achieving self-sufficiency through the U.S. resettlement program, has been temporarily disrupted, thwarted or delayed by the health threats and economic impacts of COVID-19.
- In ordinary times, ORR has the mandate, infrastructure, and professional and cultural capacities to facilitate resilience and self-sufficiency among these individuals. In crisis times, ORR is in the best position to most efficiently help them address unemployment, link them with safe employment, and with transitional support for basic survival needs including housing, transportation, child education, and health care.
- We urge Congress to provide $642 million in supplemental funding to ORR: To serve the estimated 620,978 members of ORR populations of concern who have arrived in the last five years and are under the ORR mandate to provide them transitional support to build resilience and self-reliance.
 - $313.9 million in Transitional and Medical Services (including $295 million to allow Refugee Cash Assistance and Refugee Medical Assistance for up to 18 months, to meet unemployment relief gaps, and $18.9 million for Match Grant for emergency transitional expenses).
 - $249.5 million for Refugee Support Services, including $49.5 million to expand the case management system, and the rest for emergency housing, education, and health needs for refugees.
 - $78.6 million for further emergency/recovery response, including to maintain local ORR infrastructure.
- It enables ORR to link refugees to safe employment, augment basic needs stemming from COVID-19 unemployment, including housing, food, health care, transportation, education.
- Leaving out some communities leaves all communities at greater risk. Thus, at this time of national health and economic crisis, it is important that all populations, including refugees and other ORR Populations of Concern, are able to fully participate in efforts that slow and mitigate COVID-19 and put us all in the best position to preserve and rebuild our nation's health and economy.

All people have the legal right to seek protection from persecution and violence.

- We stand opposed to any proposal that bans asylum seekers (such as MPP, PACR, HARP, the new anti-asylum CDC rule) or limits access to protection based on prior convictions or removals.
- Families are fleeing their communities due to violence, desperation, and persecution, and have faced incredible challenges in hopes of seeking protection. We are called to uphold our moral and legal obligations, not turn our backs or close our doors.
- People fleeing violence in Central America should be welcomed, not illegally turned away or criminalized for seeking protection. They should not be coerced or threatened with family separation or incarceration, either. This is a false, cruel choice.
- The United States should uphold principles of due process for immigrant families and children. Congress should support community-based residential care, post-release services, and home studies that offer unaccompanied children a family-based care environment.
- Families belong in communities, not prison. We have stood strongly against family separation and family detention because it hurts some of the most vulnerable among us.
- The administration should focus on processing asylum cases equitably and efficiently, as we have the largest backlog of asylum cases (1+ million on record between EOIR & USCIS).
